SPLH 120

Speech-Language-Hearing - The Physics of Speech ( 4 / N ) Spring 2018

An introduction to the acoustic structure of speech intended for nonscience majors. Emphasis will be placed on the methods and standards by which scientists measure and evaluate the physical characteristics of speech. Topics will include: simple harmonic motion, the propagation of sound waves, aerodynamic aspects of vocal fold vibration, resonance, digital speech processing, frequency analysis, and speech synthesis. Three class hours and one laboratory per week. (Same as LING 120.) Prerequisite: MATH 101 or 104 or equivalent.

Speech-Language-Hearing - Mentored Research Experience ( 2-8 / AE61 / S ) Spring 2018

Study may be directed toward either reading for integration of knowledge and insight in Speech-Language-Hearing, or original research in the field. Student creates a plan of activities at the beginning of each semester under the mentor's guidance. Student and mentor review this plan at the end of each semester to evaluate progress. In the final semester of enrollment, student must complete a written report or a public oral presentation detailing the purpose, methods, results, and impact of the research. This final product partially meets the requirements for Research Experience Certification. (Eight hours maximum credit, which may be distributed through 4 semesters. No student may enroll for less than two hours credit or more than 4 hours of credit in a given semester). Prerequisite: Consent of Departmental Research Experience Coordinator.

SPLH 620

Speech-Language-Hearing - Cmnctg Brain:Ultmt Prsnl Cmptr ( 3 / U ) Spring 2018

This course introduces the study of human neuroscience with a particular focus on human communication. The course provides an overview of the relevant anatomical structures and function along with an introduction to the basic methods used to investigate central nervous system function. Students are introduced to the study of perceptual, motor, and language function in the nervous system through a series of examples drawn from normal function and clinical cases. The examples are selected to highlight how these systems develop and are influenced by experience, implantable devices developed to interface with the nervous system, and how computers and animals are used as models to learn about nervous system function. Prerequisite: A 400-level course in SPLH, or consent of instructor.

Speech-Language-Hearing - Multicultrl Considrtns SPLH II ( 1 ) Spring 2018

This course builds on foundational concepts from SPLH 888 by exploring potential cultural and linguistic characteristics of populations that are typically underrepresented in many sectors of the United States, including education and health care. Case studies are implemented to examine cultural and linguistic influences on assessment and treatment processes in speech-language pathology and audiology. This course is offered at the 500 and 800 levels, with additional assignments at the 800 level. Prerequisite: SPLH 888 or consent of instructor.
